American Social Outlawing

by
Thomas M. Saunders
Bill Of Attainder Project

One of the dynamics influencing bills of attainder is social outlawing. Social outlawing inspires the government to introduce and pass laws called bills of attainder. "A bill of attainder is a law or legal device used to outlaw people, suspend their civil rights, confiscate their property, punish or put them to death without a trial." (1) Bills of attainder are laws or legal devices the government administers against citizens. They are forbidden to be passed by the legislature according to Article 1, Sections 9, and 10, of the U.S. Constitution.

Although it sounds simple, "just don't do it" bills of attainder are becoming common in this country. We find that the majority of legislators, judges, lawyers, and citizens have no idea about bills of attainder, or what they really are. There is no legitimate definition of bill of attainder in the United States Code.(2) This fact has cost Americans plenty. People do not realize that without the right to personal property they are in fact subjects, not citizens.

Bills of attainder come about because of social anxiety and the influence that anxiety has on society and lawmakers. Those who wrote the Constitution, who understood the dynamics of social outlawing, knew we needed a way to stop it. Too bad the bill of attainder mandates never developed in American law as a mechanism to actually stop outlawing. They have been ignored in most of our history so that laws like Jim Crow could be administered and enforced without opposition. By defining what a bill of attainder actually is, we could restore our rights in our justice system meant to protect us against such repressive laws.

America's biggest outlawing fiasco was the McCarthy era. The legislature made numerous attempts to outlaw communists, many with the approval of almost everyone. We have not studied and learned from the social mechanisms that caused that disaster. One of the ways to stop this kind of disaster is to define a bill of attainder for what it really is. This will clarify individual liberty, and serve to eliminate laws that plunder individual liberty.

The media thrives on today's laws that permit police to enforce bills of attainder like asset forfeiture. They have no incentive to see these laws changed. The government enacts laws that clearly have provided the media with stories every day and continues to do so at the expense of citizens and their rights. There is a clear trend in America to deny civil liberties to anyone who can be labeled a criminal. The media and the government would prefer us to look at criminals as non-people.

We as Americans have not preserved our right to private property, are not protected from ex-post facto laws, have around 300 federal laws which allows the government to steal private property outside the boundaries of due process, and a society who believes these laws actually protect them. The reason this society believes that is the media's dedication to presenting views that do not contain real information about civil rights. The media constantly promotes Communicist (Communitarian) dogma. A sure way to appear on the news is to present a way we can protect America's children by eliminating individual rights in one manner or another. The ideas out there are many and they are all presented by the media as good for the community. They almost always follow a "controlist" philosophy, and they always promote outlawing.

Many bills of attainder we have in our law are there as a result of the social anxiety that promoted outlawing. Recently, many associated with the Republic of Texas who had not broken the law experienced having their rights violated because they could be associated and maligned with the real trouble makers. Most Americans believe the "militia" picture the media painted about the Republic's membership. In fact it just was not true. (3)

Another example of social outlawing these days is what is happening in the U.S. military with all the sex scandals. The U.S. military laws are a microcosm of national laws, and their problems reflect our society's problems. Some are guilty of the crimes they are accused of, but there are too many innocent people effected by the influence of outlawing.

The military laws concerning adultery, fraternization, and sexual pressure brought on by the military caste system are examples of laws to control morality. These laws were meant to promote respect, morale, and moral turpitude amongst the troops we send to places like Panama to slaughter innocent civilians. Laws passed to promote somebody else's morality often backfire. The media can fuel the fires of social outlawing or like in this case they have pointed out the stupidity and harm of this kind of outlawing.

Another example of social outlawing is what just happened to Disney with the "Baptist Boycott." Southern Baptists want to boycott Disney on the basis that they promote homosexuality on ABC, and at Disney theme parks. If great strides had not come about concerning gay rights and preventing discrimination, the influence and the social anxiety by the Baptists might influence the law. Disney and ABC ought to be congratulated for promoting equal rights. Baptists ought to pray, and not "prey" for salvation and mention those they believe are in spiritual danger in their prayers, and leave it at that. America's religious community has awesome political power.

It is ironic that the very month before the "boycott," ABC led a month long communicist propaganda campaign which almost ensures the insane "War On Drugs" will continue to influence Americans out of more civil liberties. What ABC needs to tell Americans is these laws make Americans "subjects" not citizens. The promotion of laws that plunder American life, liberty, and property, protect nobody.

The media can be stopped from promoting these laws if more Americans pay attention to "communicist" dogma, and confront news media with the communicist issue. When somebody promotes an idea that encroaches upon civil liberties, they should be confronted. If modern political activists will stand up for individual liberty over communicist doctrine the media may be forced to actually examine individual liberty, or the lack of it.

One of this nation's most dangerous communicists is Pat Robertson. Organizations like the Christian Coalition and Opus Dei (4) can have a tremendous influence politically. Members of organizations like the Christian Coalition have a tendency to be influenced into action without question. Hitler had the same kind of influence on his followers. Hitler's use of bills of attainder and his manipulation of conspiracies is legendary. Pat Robertson is not Hitler, but they both promote and influence bills of attainder by their tremendous social influence.

Pat's new promise is to see to it that the Constitution and the Ten Commandments go hand in hand. What's wrong with this picture? This nation's religious right is responsible for promoting more bills of attainder than any other faction outside the communicists in the U.S. Congress. How about seeing to it that the law is based upon the premise, "thou shalt not steal." Or Pat, explain why the half billion dollars a year the government takes from Americans is not stealing. Explain how well this nation's "overclass" is teaching morality to the "underclass" by breaking down our doors to steal what is inside.

Another thing I'd like the religious right and Americans to address is the use of personification of property in our courts to justify confiscation of personal property. Personification of property is the belief that material things like your house, car, plane, boat, or even your money has the power to commit crimes by their own free will. Pose this idea in the church and you will quickly learn most are opposed to it, like "Devil Worship." Why is it allowed to be done in our courts? Most people do not realize our courts have the power to issue souls and free will to property.

Millions of dollars in private property has been stolen from Americans from the use of personification of property in our courts. The belief that objects can have free will is an idea based in witchcraft, the occult, and devil worship. In occult law, objects have to be instilled or cursed to have this power.(5) By promoting politicians that support asset forfeiture, like Phil Grahm, Henry Hyde, and Don Nichols, the religious community has promoted the use of personification to steal property. I am sure Phil Grahm, Henry Hyde, and Don Nichols would not propose personification of property to the church. Why are they promoting it in the courts?

Some in the communicist/ religious right movement know full well the facts concerning the use of personification of property in our courts. They continue to promote politicians that make these laws that plunder our life, liberty and property. These sacerdotalist orders (6) influence our laws which deny us our rights, and they do it almost without opposition. They can actually scare the legislature into action promoting "feel good" legislation that causes thousands of Americans problems they should be protected from. By properly defining the phrase "bill of attainder" in our law we can eliminate these problems.

The newest communicist plan President Clinton has to make America safer is to provide incentives for police to obtain houses in inner cities at a 50% break. These are the policemen the government has given the power to use over 300 laws to go "shopping" with. These are the same kind of laws that fill our prisons and provide no protection against corruption. As much as 75% of the people arrested are for crimes which are drug related and these laws are based upon sacerdotalistic morality. These laws and policies are bills of attainder.

Understanding the process of outlawing by the government, the media, and society, will help stop laws that plunder, if political activists will stand up and confront the communicists. The communicist threat to individual liberty is a real one but many communicist ideas are presented by people who do not understand what their rights are supposed to be. It is very pleasing to tell them what a communicist is and watch their face as they realize their mistake, especially concerning private property.

If you are a political activist stand up to the communicists (people that promote laws that plunder our life liberty and property). Go one-on-one and make them understand they have no right to give away your civil liberties or the liberties of any other American. There are whole organizations out there who irresponsibly promote policies that influence bills of attainder. When the "communicists" use the media, let the media know they owe equal time to the promotion of civil liberties and the restoration of the American "subject" to American "citizen."

Timothy McVeigh is going to be murdered
by
Ron Cole

Timothy McVeigh is going to be murdered because 168 people were murdered on April 19, 1995, and they were murdered because 86 people were murdered on April 19, 1993, and they were murdered because 4 people were murdered on February 28, 1993, and, it didn't hardly begin there.

If you were to look up the definition of war in the dictionary, you would find that the word well describes the actions and reactions effecting our lives so dramatically, today. Those actions and reactions have only occasionally resulted in death, but they nearly always involve destruction and suffering. I know this because I was raided and arrested by the FBI's Domestic Terrorism Unit on May 1 [1997]. I am a prisoner of that war because my arrest represented part of the FBI's reaction to the Oklahoma City bombing.

But, the term war is almost never used by us to describe the environment in which we live. The actions and reactions going on around us, that are both taking lives and destroying lives, are removed from their proper perspective. As events of violence occur, the tendency is to write the events off as "incidents" with no cause or effect. Without the proper perspective, reactions to actions are not seen for what they really are. Without the proper perspective, I would have believed that I was arrested simply because someone said I had the wrong kind of guns. Without the proper perspective, the patriot movement has much to fear from its enemies, and more to fear from itself.

In the case of the Oklahoma City bombing, people in the patriot movement wasted valuable energy and resources trying to show the world that the bombing had nothing to do with them, the movement, or anything that anyone felt strongly about. We blamed the bombing on the US government, the Japanese, or insane maniacs that we shared absolutely nothing in common with. The fact that the bombing represented a reaction to the action of the federal government's attack on Waco was largely missed at the time. It was a fact that was not only missed, but avoided all together by most people. The fact is, the vast majority of the people in the patriot movement just took the easiest way out. Patriot clubs disbanded, militias changed their names to appear less militant, and the movement, as a whole, back-peddled itself right off of the map.

The trial of Timothy McVeigh is over. He was convicted by a jury, and the jury decided that he will be put to death. Now I hear that people in the patriot movement are, in many cases, and in many ways, throwing in the towel. If the trend continues, the patriot movement in the United States will meet a truly humiliating and disgraceful end.

Speaking from my position in federal custody, the knowledge that my compatriots are backing down in the face of the McVeigh verdict turns my stomach. I hated the reaction that Timothy McVeigh was a part of, and I hate the fact that I am now a prisoner as an indirect result of the bombing. Like any rational human being, I hate violence, but these things happen in a war-like environment, and now I have to deal with what is happening both to me and in this country with my head held high. Why? Not because I support violence or enjoy my environment (which, now, is prison), but because I am right, we are right, the patriot movement and what it stands for is right. As true patriots, we must understand, as General Sherman did, that "War is Hell," and we're right in the middle of it.

What all of this means to the average patriotic American is that they need to learn that they can understand the actions and reactions created by a warlike environment without supporting or condoning the inevitable acts of violence that will surely effect us. We all would now be much better off if the patriot movement, in general, had understood the actions of Timothy McVeigh two years ago, as we should have. Instead of coming off as foolish conspiracy wackos, the movement could have directed international attention upon the worst act of terrorism ever committed against the American people by their own government. Not only could we have brought needed attention to Waco, but we could also have done much to prevent another Oklahoma City bombing.

It would do us well to understand that we are all a part of a movement, not an organization. As such, we do not have the ability to cast individual people away because we dislike a part of their political ideology or because we are horrified by their tactics. The fact is that anyone who empathizes with the general cause automatically becomes a part of our movement. Such is the case with any movement, and Timothy McVeigh was, and is a part of the patriot movement, simply because he supports the movement's tenets in his own mind. It is the responsibility of the movement, therefore, to recognize the potentially violent fringe and attempt to control it as best we can. Why? Because throwing people to the dogs, even before they are found guilty of a crime, only serves to further frustrate the potentially violent fringe. Trying to disassociate ourselves from everything we don't completely support may be the easiest way of dealing with inconvenient problems, but, in the long run, will probably bring about more death and destruction.

Buildings full of children are rarely blown up by people acting rationally. Those who have committed such acts, like Timothy McVeigh, do so out of sheer desperation. The established system in the United States failed McVeigh. He, naturally, turned to the patriot movement for constructive solutions. But, the movement in those days, like today, lacked direction and possessed no reliable leadership. The fact that the movement offered no constructive solutions should be obvious, as the deaths of 168 people clearly indicates. That is not to say that we should consider ourselves responsible for those deaths, but we cannot ignore the potentially violent fringe and hope that they will go away. Everyone within the movement suffers mounting frustration because we offer nearly no constructive solutions, direction, or leadership. It should go without saying that there are those who possess shorter fuses than the rest.

Trying to throw those with shorter fuses out of the movement, even if we could identify these people, is both unrealistic and counterproductive. The only solution is to provide everyone with a united and strong patriot movement that is capable of providing leadership and constructive solutions. Anything less will generate more frustrated people. Some of whom will resort to irrational acts of violence, and the world will blame all of us for it.

As far as Timothy McVeigh is concerned, his name will be added to the growing list of human beings who have been killed in the war-like environment we are living in. There are those in the movement who applaud his pending execution as a means of making themselves look better. I have even more to gain by vilifying McVeigh. As I sit here in prison, I know that I could see my family again a lot sooner if I appeased the prosecutors in my case by saying the things that they want me to say. But, I will not cheer the murder of one of my countrymen no matter what he did. I may rot in prison for the rest of my life, but I'll rot with my head held high.

How patriots dealt with the Oklahoma City bombing two years ago is now water under the bridge, but how we deal with Timothy McVeigh's conviction and execution will do much to determine our collective future. More importantly, we must decide now how we will look upon the actions and reactions going on around us. Then, and only then, will we be able to build a movement based on experience, not ideology, and offer constructive solutions to those who seek our guidance and direction. What we do now will determine the future of the patriot movement with all of its professed high ideals. As one of the people, what you decide will either give the desperate some rational recourse, or leave them with no alternative but to remain desperate, and to act desperately.

THE REV. ROBERT MILLAR IDENTIFIED AS FBI INFORMANT

From: The John Doe Times -- Mo10Cav@aol.com

McCurtain Daily Gazette (Idabel, Oklahoma)
1 July 1997

THE REV. ROBERT MILLAR IDENTIFIED AS FBI INFORMANT

By J.D. Cash

Tulsa-- Near pandemonium broke out in a federal courtroom here Monday when a senior agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation shocked observers by telling the court that the spiritual leader of Elohim City, the Rev. Robert Millar, was a confidential informant for the FBI.

The McCurtain Daily Gazette has long been reporting that Elohim City is a religious and paramilitary compound in east-central Oklahoma that is frequented by some of the most dangerous members of the neo-Nazi underground in the United States and Canada.

Although residents of the cult have continued to deny it publicly, the Gazette has reported that its sources believe one of those shadowy figures was Timothy McVeigh.

Stories published in this newspaper have also exposed Elohim City as the center of a wide-ranging conspiracy to overthrow the federal government by members of a group called the Aryan Republican Army.

Several of those members have since been arrested on charges related to a string of bank robberies across the midwestern United States.

The incredible revelation that the leader of Elohim City himself was part of a government intelligence operation came during a pre-trial hearing associated with the upcoming trial of another confidential informant and frequenter of the compound, Carol E. Howe.

Howe, a former Tulsa beauty queen, debutante and one-time paid undercover informant for the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, is scheduled to stand trial later this month for conspiracy charges associated with making bomb threats and possession of bomb-making components.

Howe was indicted shortly after the Gazette reported that she intended to be a key witness in the trial of Timothy McVeigh.

U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch, who presided over the McVeigh trial, refused to let Howe testify in Denver-- ruling that her information that Elohim City was the center of the bombing conspiracy "might confuse the jury."

Under questioning Monday by Howe attorney Clark Brewster of Tulsa, Special Agent Peter Rickel stunned everyone when he reluctantly admitted that the man Elohim City cult members call "Grandpa" is really a cooperating source for the FBI.

Millar's status as a confidential informant began in the fall of 1994. The FBI admitted in court that Millar was a paid confidential informant, although the amount of his paycheck was not revealed.

When Rickel disclosed this startling information, a senior FBI agent and several U.S. attorneys bolted from the courtroom in an agitated state.

Millar's encampment was heretofore considered by experts in domestic terrorism to be the "Switzerland" of the neo-Nazi movement in the United States.

Elohim City, a 1,000-acre area of rolling timberland, is the residence of some 80 followers. But more importantly, it has played host to some of this nation's most notable subversives.

Thus Millar's position as a mole for the FBI could explain why the compound has never been raided.

Despite its use as a hideout for gunrunners, drug dealers, bank robbers and suspected members of the conspiracy that bombed the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City, Elohim City has enjoyed a reputation as a place fugitives can live without fear of arrest.

In the weeks before the Oklahoma City bombing, BATF agent Angela Findley had planned to raid the compound and arrest its security advisor, Andreas Carl Strassmeir.

Strassmeir, an illegal alien who migrated to Elohim City from Germany, was suspected by Findley of converting semi-automatic weapons to machine guns as well as plotting with other Elohim City residents and visitors to bomb federal installations.

Carol Howe reported to Findley during the time she worked for the BATF.

Howe told Findley that Strassmeir was the ringleader in the plot to bomb the Oklahoma City federal building and that Millar was preaching twice a day to his flock that the group had to act by April 19, 1995, or they would end up like the Branch Davidians in Waco.

The arrest of Strassmeir was scrubbed after senior members of the BATF, the FBI and the U.S. Attorney's office met in February, 1995 and discussed Findley's plan.

Sources have told the Gazette that Strassmeir was also an important source of intelligence for the U.S. government.

In January, 1996, shortly after it was discovered that it was Strassmeir that Timothy McVeigh had called for in the days before the bombing, the German national fled to his native Berlin with the aid of German intelligence officers.

With Millar now exposed, the loss of Elohim City as a virtual nest of spies for the U.S. intelligence community is almost assured.

But such a loss could have consequences far beyond the obvious.

If Millar was reporting a wider conspiracy to bomb the Oklahoma City federal building, and those reports were not subsequently turned over to Timothy McVeigh's defense team, then the withholding of such critical information by the FBI could get McVeigh a new trial.

Those reports, as well as Howe's, will likely be sought by the defense teams for both McVeigh and Terry Nichols and may also be subpoenaed by the grand jury convened in Oklahoma City to investigate the bombing.

Also those reports could prove important in several civil suits that are pending against the government for its alleged failure to notify the occupants of the Murrah building that there was a heightened risk of danger on April 19, 1995. And Congress is also looking into the government's intelligence role in the bombing.

Calls to the compound to get Millar's comments about the situation were not returned.

END OF STORY

The vindication of Reverend Robert Millar

The vindication of Reverend Robert Millar
by
Gary Hunt,
Outpost of Freedom
July 4, 1997

The July 2, 1997, Tulsa World on-line carried an article titled "Elohim City Leader Admits He Provided FBI With Information."

This is not the first article on the Internet which has attempted to cast aspersions on the character of a very fine gentleman. One of the accusers, J. D. Cash, met Rev. Millar one day in October, 1995 when I took Cash to Elohim City to introduce them. I had spoken to Millar on a number of occasions, and first met him a few days before when I took Richard Reyna, of the McVeigh defense team, to meet him. I had cleared these introductions with Millar days earlier when I had arranged to stay at Elohim City for a few days. My trip to Oklahoma had been at the request of the defense team. Some members of the press and Glenn Wilburn.

Rev. Millar, and all of the people at Elohim were very gracious and friendly. Mary Snell, widow of Wayne Snell, was willing to move out the mobile home she was staying in so that I wouldn't have to sleep on a couch somewhere. My meals were provided, by a number of people over the four days I was there. I walked with the children to the lake being created for swimming, and set crosses at Wayne Snell's and two other graves, on a hilltop on the property. During my entire stay, not once was I questioned about my activities, as would have been done by an informant.

As I read the article, I attempted to retain objectivity in any judgment of Millar and Elohim City that I might come to. It is with knowledge of the place and the people that I now provide you some food for thought.

Elohim City has been known for years among the Christian Identity movement. It has been the location of an FBI invasion, which was quashed at the beginning by Rev. Millar reasoning with the FBI. It's hundred-plus people have established a very comfortable community, without regard to building code, just as you and I would like the right to do in our own communities.

The children are community schooled. To the people at Elohim, the sun at the apex is the beginning of the day, and each day is begun with service to the Lord. Men have jobs in town, or for the trucking company that is operated out of Elohim City. Many of the drivers are gone for days or weeks at a time, but there is no reason for concern for the safety of the family, for the entire community shares and is not much different than one large family, itself.

Now, about the allegations. Suppose that you had, after years of fighting the battles that many of the newer members of the patriot community have just begun to fight, decided that it was time to sit back and live your life as close to those ideals as you could. You have friends in prison, friends who have turned states evidence and friends who have been executed. The achievements of your own efforts, among other things, has provided you the means to establish a Godly community, as close to what you desire to live as you possibly can under the present circumstances. Years of effort and hundreds of acres of land, and the dream is coming true, Your family, and others are able to live as they choose, on the edge of a state and on the edge of the contemptible civilization that surrounds them.

Not long ago, the dream was nearly shattered because the government thought that some of the members might have been a part of a plot. Frequent visitors had been arrested, charged and convicted of crimes. The FBI confronted your community over these allegations, but, fortunately, a peaceful resolution was had. And, you are back to life, as you would have it.

A few years later, because of the openness of the community, a number of people come to visit. They 'conspire' to do certain things that you cannot condone. Worse, they speak to you and some of the younger members of the community in an effort to solicit participation. The Godliness of the community won't allow you to turn away from providing for these visitors, but you cannot become a participant in their efforts.

Then, in April 1995, your community, because of a single phone call, has become a focal point for the condemnation of the bomber(s) of the Alfred AZP. Murrah building. You still cannot close your door to strangers, nor can you put a stop to their conversations. But, are you bound to risk all that you have achieved because some over-zealous patriot, or true government informant or agent, chose to discuss their plans in your presence, in your community, as your guest?

Rev. Millar never ran to the FBI with information, but he said what he had to say to protect what he had created. It is not his fault, nor should he be blamed. This sensationalist tactic is an effort to destroy a very fine gentleman. All blame should go directly where it belongs -- on the indiscreet, the informant, the agent and any who would impose this sort of risk on such a fine community as Elohim City.

Dear Martin,

Thank you for responding.... your observations of Judge Matsch were very interesting.

I gather that you assume that I (we) are Identity... which is NOT the case, however, I am sending along to you an article by Bruder Schweigen, Richard Scutari, POW, which we recently published.

It may interest you...

Sincerely yours,

by Richard Scutari

Recently I received a newspaper article from the Benton County Daily Record, dated February 6, 1997. The content was more than disturbing, in fact, it was well nigh unbelievable. The article concerned a Christian Identity community called "Elohim City," located in Oklahoma about 10 miles east of Ft. Smith, Arkansas. It stated that four of the five White supremacists indicted a week earlier on charges of conspiring to rob seven midwestern banks had visited or lived at Elohim City, and that two weeks before the Oklahoma city bombing Timothy McVeigh had telephoned the Identity compound.

Elohim City's leader is Robert G. Millar. He is considered to be one of the most important leaders of America's Christian Identity movement. Elohim City was not armed until after 1982 when Millar met Kerry Noble and CSA founder James Ellison, according to the article.

Today Ellison lives at Elohim City and he is married to one of Millar's granddaughters. Millar believes that Ellison is the man to lead the right wing movement.

Anyone from the White resistance should feel total revulsion upon hearing the contents of this article. Those who have been involved for a number of years know why, but for newcomers, let me explain.

James Ellison bought his way out of prison by becoming the Federals' star witness at the 1988 sedition trial in Ft. Smith, Arkansas. His testimony was predominantly perjury. One of the defendants he testified against was Richard Snell, who was subsequently executed by zog the day of the Oklahoma City bombing. There would, in fact, have been no sedition trial without the testimony of the piece of smelly sewage called James Ellison. One of the defendants in the sedition trial was Ellison's own 22 year old son-in-law. In Ellison's bid to buy his way out of prison he did all he could to give his own son-in-law a life sentence. Yet, Pastor Millar believes Ellison is the man to lead the right wing?!!

The five individuals who were recently indicted and who had stayed at Elohim City were apparently part of a group known as the "Aryan Republican Army." These courageous and honorable men took up where the Order Brüder Schweigen left off. Our folk should honor and support these warriors. One of the five is/was engaged to Millar's step-daughter. This individual is also named in a civil suit by the victims of the Oklahoma City bombing as a co-defendant with Timothy McVeigh.

So, now we see that Pastor Millar gives sanctuary to one of the lowest and slimiest vermin who has ever crawled on earth, and by doing so he endangered brave and honorable soldiers of the Folk. Ellison betrays family, friends and race. He is a bought-and-paid-for whore for the FBI. He got released from prison for committing race treason and even got paid for his vile acts. Once owned by the FBI, always owned by the FBI. Millar was and is fully aware of Ellison's character and he is thus fully responsible and equally guilty. Elohim City can be regarded as no more than an FBI information gathering center. Ellison's presence there might even lend credibility to the theory that the Oklahoma City bombing was a government sting operation that went sour.

I suppose there will be those from the Identity branch of the resistance who will take offense to these words, or even come to the defense of Millar, Ellison and Elohim City. It reminds me that Dan Gayman, who took money from the Brüder Schweigen, then testified against us to save his skin, is nonetheless still a major Identity "leader." Those who defend treason and who accept the scum of the earth as their "leaders" ignore facts and surrender their minds to fantasy. They may preach an Identity message, but their minds are Judeo-Christian. Anyone who condones Millar and Elohim City could care less about those who rot in zog's prisons as a result of Ellison's treason.

- Fact 1 - Ellison is a bought-and-paid-for fbi informant.
- Fact 2 - Ellison resides at Elohim City with Millar's blessing.
- Fact 3 - Honorable men who reside at Elohim City now face long prison sentences.
- Fact 4 - There is a tie between Timothy McVeigh and Elohim City.
- Fact 5 - The government knew about the Oklahoma City bombing in advance. This is attested to by the circumstance of Federalists who were told to stay away from the building that was bombed on the day it happened, and by other evidence.

Draw your own conclusions, but if you value your freedom, avoid the FBI branch office at Elohim City.

Never An Off Season for FBI Informants at Elohim City?

I agree with you that the government court system is a festering sewer. I have never met an honest lawyer or judge in my quarrels with the State of Missouri or federal system. I have four federal lawsuits out over election violations and civil rights violations and spent a month in jail for contempt of court in April '96. It ostensibly was over a unpaid (illegal) fine over a burned-out 18-wheeler dimmer-side headlight. So I am a convicted misdeameanant & headlight desperado.

Matsch used to be a U.S. attorney before he became a judge. He used to prosecute before the bench, now he is a prosecutor on the bench. A friend of mine, Robert Joos, told me how Matsch congratulated him (Joos) for avoiding a federal indictment by some IRS rascals by appearing before the grand jury and telling them his side of the matter. Matsch told Joos that he was the only one he has seen smart enough to know his rights by getting his side of it before the grand jury rather than let the US attorneys run wild like they usually do. (I asked Bob if Matsch should know -- having abused and allowed to be abused the system himself.) Joos is an offshoot Christian Identity pastor who has been abused by what passes as a court system in adjoining McDonald County.

At a rally for Joos in July 1996 I met a bunch of people from Elohim City, including Dr. Robert Millar, who gave me his card and invited me to come down and visit. I look like a Swedish peasant most of the time. I informed Dr. Millar that the press was saying all manner of stuff about him and his settlement and that he was famous -- notorious. Dr. Millar warned me not to believe everything I see in a newspaper.

I might go down and take him up on his invite and see what the fuss is all about, but perhaps I should wait until a season when the federal informants thin out. I have been told that they are so thick sometimes that you cannot swing a dead cat by the tail without hitting one or two.

Since the system is so corrupt, imputing reasonable doubt should be mandatory for the consciencious juror. (Let me tell you how I got kicked off of a jury pool by what I suspect was the Newton County prosecutor's office calling up and posing as poll takers in July 1993 sometime.) So I have no problem in allowing that your husband was wrongfully tried. Since he is an open enemy of the current regime, the title of POW would be correct.

The current regime's captive corrupt court system should be abolished in favor of a lottery system of properly paid rotating jurors of normal IQ, with a smaller subsystem of high intelligence volunteers who have learned the law as judges, also chosen by lot. There would be no special guild of lawyers with special privileges, as the courts would be open to all for the adjudication of disputes. Only serious matters, not idiotic traffic tickets would be decided as the initiators of foolishness would pay the full price for legal foolishness.

Of course what "should be" will not come to pass until "what is" has destroyed itself.

• Stressors are the environmental factors that cause stress.

The roots of the American Resistance movement have been around for a long time. As long as there has been tyranny, corruption and decay in local and national government, you will have some of the victims, tired of being victims, forming a natural reaction, a resistance movement. This in turn stimulates fear from the criminal classes who have taken control of the government because they rightly fear the consequences of their injustices. They seek to infiltrate every Resistance movement which has the potential ability to destroy their criminal regime, and themselves with it. This sets in motion a cycle of mistrust and betrayal which affects all involved: regime, resistance, and society at large. With this lack of trust, not knowing who is a betrayer and who is a loyal ally, all human organizations internally collapse, from Resistance cell to gubbnmint agency to the surrounding overall civilization.

Some of the more far-sighted and experienced Resistance individuals like Louis Beam have advocated a policy of "Leaderless Resistance." This is in effect an inoculation against the overall disease of betrayal and treachery endemic in our society by choosing quality individuals of proven moral worth and having them interact only among themselves. It is in effect putting into effect a John Galt maneuver, wherein select individuals pull themselves out of society, depriving the civilization of their genius while at the same time infiltrating and sabotaging the overall base society to hasten the day when they can emerge to live in peace and freedom among a society of their peers. This is a Revolt of the New Elites, at war with the old, tired, corrupt elites who have lost everything which made them rulers except a desire to rule. It is not guerrilla warfare in the old sense because the new elites will let the middle fend for itself, with the exception of whatever elements of the middle decisively choose their side now when the New Elites are weak. Right now society exists at the stage wherein an uneasy corrupt Old Elite senses that the future holds for them justice and is using its Kourts and Media allies to whip up the masses to destroy these New Elites of the Resistance movement. Hence the current Kulturkampf, a precursor of open and total civil warfare.

One of the oldest such secessions from the masses involves Elohim City. These people have withdrawn from a social order they find degenerate and immoral. However such an open withdrawal is usually not allowed by the current regime as it is both a slap in the face ("So you think you are better than us state-god worshippers do you!") and a threat to their doxology of power. (The rest of the slaves will ask "How come those strange people get to live by themselves in peace and freedom and we got to provide taxes and cannon fodder for our rulers' benefit?") The Branch Davidians and the Weaver family tried to secede or drop out from 'The Land of the Free and Home of the Brave' and look where it got them. They were denounced as 'separatists' -- a capital crime nowadays -- and open season was declared on them by the state-god and its minions. So why has Elohim City, a nest of religious separatists if there ever was one, been spared the wrath of Baal?

The reason why?: Elohim City provides a service. Dr. Bob provides a service. Potential crazies and open rebels must live someplace when they are not in Federal prisons. By letting them concentrate themselves at Elohim City where they can be kept an eye on by their own reporting them to the Feds, they are essentially paying -- at their own expense -- for their own segregated confinement where they cannot infect outside society. Additionally, if the gubbnmint pulled another Waco on their open enemies, no longer could the current regime pretend that Waco and Ruby Ridge were "a disaster" and that "mistakes were made" in their implementation as opposed to showing their inherent nature of pure distilled hypocritical evil.

So for the good of his chosen society, perhaps Pastor Dr. Robert Millar informs on the indiscreet crazies and militants who run their mouths off while visiting at Elohim City. Based upon my impression when I met him, Pastor Millar simply lets his visitors do whatever they are going to do outside the boundaries of Elohim City. If the FBI/BATF and their foolish Rent-A-Nazis want to make deals and perform contracts on Federal buildings and gubbnmint employees outside the jurisdictional and parochial limits of Elohim City, what's it to Dr. Bob? Why believe what a Fibbie has to say on the witness stand of a government-franchised perjury parlor? They have been known to lie.

What business does any Resistance leader have at Elohim City? It did occur to me when Dr. Bob gave me his business card and an invitation that perhaps he was inviting some rising talent to his town in order to sound me out. That would be understandable if any communication started and stopped with Dr. Bob. However, what if it doesn't? Should a Resistance 'leader' have a need to run his mouth off to the choir, especially when some of them might not be good choirboys?

Now I might go down and visit Pastor Millar some day, if I get the time, money or inclination. However, I will not go down there oblivious to the realities that Elohim City is under both external and internal observation by state-god agents. Any other visitor had better be similarly grounded in such reality.

Richard Keyes Alive?

Report: Republic of Texas fugitive alive, threatening revenge

June 26, 1997

Web posted at: 2:21 p.m. EDT (1821 GMT)

In this story:

(CNN) -- Republic of Texas militant Richard Keyes III, who evaded capture nearly two months ago and was thought by some law enforcement personnel to be dead, is alive and predicts more anti-government violence by supporters of the separatist group, Mother Jones magazine reported on its Web site.

In an article titled "On The Run," Keyes reportedly told a freelance writer that militia members in New Mexico helped in his escape to a place outside the United States "that's armed to the teeth."

The article is said to be based on a series of telephone interviews with Keyes, who bolted from the separatist group's West Texas mountain hideout on May 3, the day Richard McLaren and five followers surrendered to state troopers after a weeklong standoff.

Another separatist, Mike Matson, fled with Keyes and was killed in a gunbattle with troopers two days later.

Officials hunted for Keyes until May 7, then called off the search. They speculated he was probably dead in the remote, sparsely populated mountains near Fort Davis, Texas.

Keyes is wanted on charges stemming from the brief hostage-taking of a neighborhood couple that began the stalemate on April 27.

'Random acts of revenge'

"I'm past the point of no return," the Mother Jones article quotes him as saying, adding that Keyes "promises random acts of violence" in revenge for the standoff.

"If the United States is comfortable with going to war with people who have nothing to lose, then so be it," Keyes reportedly said.

In the article, the 22-year-old Keyes describes how he evaded Texas Rangers, bloodhounds, and search aircraft after the others surrendered. "Sometimes the helicopter blades were just over my head," he said. "I had to stay right there in the rocks."

Author had met Keyes before

The writer, Joel Dyer, who is editor of the "Boulder Weekly" in Boulder, Colorado, said he met Keyes last fall while studying the growth of militia movements. Dyer said Keyes contacted him on June 17.

Keyes said militia members from New Mexico helped him escape. "They sent in a special operations team and extracted me from the area," he said.

"They moved me from safehouse to safehouse. I was in a total of six. Eventually they were able to get me out of the country."

Last week, U.S. News and World Report magazine quoted an unidentified law enforcement source as saying he has spoken on the telephone with Keyes.

Various Republic of Texas groups seek independence from the United States, contending that the annexation of Texas in 1845 was illegal.

EXPLODING NUMBER OF SWAT TEAMS SETS OFF ALARMS

by William Booth, Washington Post Staff Writer, June 17, 1997 p A01
Forwarded by burro@panama.gulf.net

FRESNO, Calif. -- Sgt. Wade Engelson is preparing his new recruits for war. Dressed in fatigues, sporting buzz hair cuts, the new men are being trained in the use of submachine guns, explosives and chemical weapons. They have at their disposal a helicopter and, soon, an armored personnel carrier.

Engelson's men are not Navy Seals or Army Rangers. They are members of the Fresno Police Department, whose enemy will not be found in faraway lands but in the neighborhoods where the police routinely patrol -- fully armed and in urban camouflage.

In their expanding strength and mission, the SWAT team in Fresno mirrors a growing trend in U.S. law enforcement -- the rise in the number of police para-military units across the country and a rapid expansion of their activities, a controversial trend that police scholars refer to as "the militarization" of civilian police.

The explosive growth and expanding mission of SWAT teams has, in turn, led to complaints that an occupying army is marching through America's streets -- that they are too aggressive, too heavily armed, too scary -- and that they erode the public's perception of police as public servants.

"It's a very dangerous thing, when you're telling cops they're soldiers and there's an enemy out there," said Joseph McNamara, former chief of police in San Jose and Kansas City who is now at the Hoover Institution at Stanford University. "I don't like it all."

In a new study, police researcher Peter Kraska and his colleagues have documented the explosive growth of SWAT, which stands for Special Weapons and Tactics. In a nationwide survey of 690 law enforcement agencies serving cities with populations with 50,000 or more, the researchers found that 90 percent now have active SWAT teams, compared to 60 percent in the early 1980s.

Even in rural communities and smaller cities, the researchers have found that two of every three departments now boast a SWAT team -- a phenomenon Kraska compares to "militarizing Mayberry," he said referring to the fictional small town in the Andy Griffith television show.

Yet more important than the raw numbers, Kraska says, the SWAT mission has expanded. Once limited to highly specialized actions, such as dealing with barricaded gunmen or hostage-takers, the SWAT teams are now increasingly engaged in more standard police work. There is a boom in "high risk warrant work," including "no-knock entries." The work is mostly related to the war on drugs, and by extension, "gang suppression."

"Where the SWAT teams were once deployed a few times a year, they are now used for all kinds of police work -- dozens of calls, hundreds of calls a year," said Kraska, a professor of police studies at Western Kentucky University. "In SWAT units formed since 1980, their use has increased by 538 percent." And some units, like those in Fresno, are being deployed full-time as roaming patrols.

The 30 members of Fresno's Violent Crime Suppression Unit now patrol crime-ridden neighborhoods day and night, serving warrants at homes of suspected drug dealers and criminals, stopping vehicles, interrogating gang members, showing a presence.

As they move through the city, they wear subdued gray-and-black urban camouflage and body armor, and have at the ready, ballistic shields and helmets, M17 gas masks and rappelling gear. More equipment is carried in a mobile command SWAT bus that roves the city. The department is purchasing an armored personnel carrier.

The tactical police here also carry an assortment of weaponry denied the normal beat cop -- battering rams, diversionary devices known as flashbangs, chemical agents, such as pepper spray and tear gas, and specialized guns, including assault rifles and most famously, the Heckler and Koch MP5, the short, highly accurate 9mm, fully automatic submachine gun used by the Navy Seals.

While the phenomenal rise in SWAT work has drawn some fire, police officials say the change has been a necessary one that has made an impact on crime.

Fresno Police Chief Ed Winchester says that a highly armed and more violent criminal class requires an extreme response. Fresno formed its SWAT team in 1973, about a decade after the first such unit appeared in Los Angeles. Its creation occurred after an officer was shot and killed by a robbery suspect following a chaotic police response in which patrol officers fired hundreds of rounds at the suspect, borrowed an armored car and let fly canisters of tear gas, which then floated across the neighborhood.

"It was what we would call a fiasco," Winchester said, convincing everyone that a more highly trained, specialized and disciplined unit was required.

From 1973 until 1994, Fresno's SWAT team operated only in response to very specific call-outs, such as barricaded suspects. But by late 1994, Fresno was experiencing a crime wave. There were 55 shootings in five months, with 13 people killed, including three children. And so Fresno's traditional SWAT unit transformed itself into the Violent Crime Suppression Unit and took to the streets in constant patrols.

"The criminals aren't stupid," Winchester said. "They see eight guys surrounding them, all carrying submachine guns and wearing black fatigues, they don't want to get killed."

Fresno SWAT member C.D. Smith, writing in Police magazine in 1995, put it this way: "The streets of Fresno have become a war zone for cops, who find themselves in the heat of battle with the bad guys at least once a month."

Winchester credits the unit, in part, with reducing violent crime in Fresno by 8.7 percent in 1995 and 3.5 percent in 1996. Now, he is expanding the unit again -- for day patrols as well as night.

"Is there a downside? Sure there is," Winchester said. "It's a sad commentary -- sad when crime is so bad you got to put a SWAT unit on the street."

Yet critics warn the growing use of paramilitary-style police units threatens the very idea of a civilian police force -- just as many law enforcement authorities begin to apply a new technique known as "community policing," putting more beat cops on the street and letting them interact more with citizens to solve problems and well as crimes.

"Despite the conventional wisdom that community policing is sweeping the nation, the exact opposite is happening," said McNamara. "The police and their communities ought to think seriously about this. Is there a need for SWAT teams? Yes, for highly specialized functions. But the police love these units, and this is a disastrous image to project."

McNamara and other police scholars say that the positive impact of the SWAT teams on reducing crime is most likely short-lived -- and that the pressure must be maintained. They also fear that heavily armed, commando-style police -- if they remain in a neighborhood for long -- will eventually be seen as an occupying army.

Kraska said his research shows that the rise in SWAT activities has closely followed the increased resources applied to fight illegal drug use. "The drug war created the atmosphere for this kind of pro-active policing," Kraska said. "We have never seen this kind of policing, where SWAT teams routinely break through a door, subdue all the occupants and search the premises for drugs, cash and weapons."

Between 1980 and 1995, for example, Kraska found that SWAT units were employed in their traditional roles only for a minority of call-outs. Some 1.3 percent of their work was to quell civil disturbances; 3.6 percent for hostage situations; 13.4 percent for barricaded individuals. But 75 percent of their mission is now devoted to serve high-risk warrants, mostly drug raids.

Police chiefs and SWAT officers defend the practice, saying they are more aggressively rooting out and arresting drug dealers. And because of the more powerful weapons used by gangs and dealers, the work should be done by highly trained SWAT teams.

Fresno Police Chief Winchester says that the SWAT teams, because of their training and style of assault, actually fire fewer shots. "They overwhelm suspects," the chief said. "They don't need to shoot."

Kraska's survey of police departments finds many SWAT teams are instructed by active and retired U.S. military experts in special operations. The SWAT teams also receive training not only from the FBI, the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center and National Tactical Officers Association, but in classes organized by private companies.

One of the most popular courses is offered by Heckler and Koch, which trains hundreds of SWAT officers a year. The company also offers the units discounts on its popular weapons, such as the MP5. Kraska points to the private companies role in the encouragement of SWAT response as part of a new "crime control industry."

Larry Glick, executive director of the National Tactical Officers Association, said that some of the private training seminars are taught by "retired military personnel who don't know what they're doing." The training offered by Heckler and Koch is "very successful and credible, among the best," he said. "Their ultimate goal is to sell their guns."

Kraska and other police scholars said that even with the most community-sensitive training, the new weaponry and paramilitary-style tactics of the SWAT units attract a different kind of officer -- less the cop as social worker and more the cop as an elite special `ops' soldier. And most SWAT officers are paid a premium for the work.

"The SWAT teams love this stuff," Kraska said. "It's fun to fire these weapons. It's exciting to train. They use `simmunition' -- like the paint balls and play warrior games. This stuff is a rush."

I would like to thank Carol and Dot for these questions of internal security which every Resistance organization must face.

I remember in Nov. '95 John Parsons of Tri-State Militia saying that he talked to the FBI and turned in Willy Lampley. When I heard in May '96 that Parsons admitted that he had been getting 1800 pieces of silver a month I laughed my head off and reminded my friends that I had told them so and that the FBI and Parsons deserved one another.

Ken Adams of Michigan has been narking to the FBI as well, if you read the US News and World Report article in March '97. That and his showing up on Nightline on Friday June 13 after the McVeigh verdict and not giving an ass-chewing to the FBI thug who blamed (as thugs do) the Koresh bunch for "killing themselves." A patriot never lets a goon even pretend to hold the moral high ground.

So how do you detect a fed in your midst if he doesn't go out and admit it? You can't! Other than the tell-tale signs such as saying that the FBI is a 'constitutional' agency of the government and how they are not such bad guys (puke, puke), then you really have no idea.

Simply put, I view everyone who in this day and age insists on forming open 'constitutional' militias comprised of complete strangers to each other as useful idiots unwittingly serving the government. These 'militias' can be used for as stalking horses, propaganda anchors, disinformation conduits and random noise generators but as fighting organizations they are absolutely useless. Their internal security is so absymal that they cannot even protect themselves.

Having no trust in their security (or lack of it) I wouldn't say anything to one of these militiamen that I wouldn't want the FBI to know.

Once you develop such an attitude, then does it really matter who might be the FBI informant among the 'militia generals' and who is an ordinary garden-variety fool? Of course not. If one practices good sense in not speaking anything other than protected 'political' speech to people you do not know, then there is no need for paranoid hyperventilating as to who is the rat.

In the 2 1/2 years I've been militia-ing, I have heard so many false accusations as to who is a government agent with very little regard as to whether that accused individual is rather a liability or asset to his militia organization. Paradoxically, the more intelligent of our brotherhood are the ones first accused, as if being a patriot isn't an intelligent course of action -- when it is those very people who are the brains and natural leadership of any successful Resistance movement.

While we should always examine ourselves as Resistance units for government cancers within our midst, it is far better to actively pursue a security-healthy lifestyle, such as forming cells as opposed to hierarchies, keeping secure information on a "need-to-know" basis, and not activating an idle curiosity or wagging tongue which disseminates tactical information.

Martin,

I appreciate your response very much, and certainly understand the general feeling about a police officer for so many are corrupt. Neither I or my husband have ANYTHING for bad "cops". When a good cop bucks the system and investigates and turns in his fellow officers or highly placed officials, as my husband did, they either get assassinated (like they tried to do to Patrick) or they get railroaded by the Kangaroo Courts, as you put it (like they did do to Patrick).

At age 16 when he was abused by a bad cop, he vowed then to become a police officer for the purpose of fighting injustice and this is what he's done...still does from prison, so now he receives retaliation from prison officials who are the absolute scum of the earth.

Any disclaimer you wish to make is fine with me, for you do not know us and you need to protect your publication. I understand this. I would do the same, were you our shoes reversed. The people who are fighting for Patrick include Mr. Jack McLamb...perhaps you know him by name. He's been fighting for many years on various media planes to get bad cops out of the system and he takes a LOT of flack from that...always has, but this does not stop him. He says the officials think it is their duty to protect the system from the people, and that is the truth of how corruption thinks. You can catch Jack McLamb on shortwave 5.745 8-9PM eastern time M-Th.

Though we come from different avenues, your fight and ours is the same. It is for justice for the people.

Thank you, Taoss

I ask because I would like to know if a letter from me, asking for help for my husband would do any good in your publication. Here is what I'd like to write. Please let me know if you would be willing to publish for me.

Fellow Activists,

I am the wife of Patrick Swiney who was a police officer in high standing for 13 years in the State of Alabama prior to getting convicted of capital murder and sentenced to life without the possibility of parole. After 8 years of fighting with all our might for Patrick to receive a fair trial, we now have the support of the NPDF (National Police Defense Foundation) because they have seen how unfair my husband's trial was from the beginning. We seek any kind of support you can offer, be it your prayers or be it any small or large donation you can contribute to support his case. We have set up a Legal Defense Fund for Patrick's defense so that he can get a new trial and be exonerated of this farce he's endured these last 8 years.

Patrick is a father, a son, a brother, and an uncle to very sweet and innocent ones who love him dearly and pray for his release. Their funds were exhausted long ago when he was first brought to trial. The attorneys who said they would defend him did not defend but rather helped the prosecuting D.A. persecute him and put him away. Why did this all happen?

Because Patrick was the one who investigated a drug ring and brought some local high officials to justice. It has been a "political" nightmare. But, by the grace of God we have finally found trustworthy people who care and who will investigate and find the truth so that Patrick will get a fair trial, and then he will be released because the charges against him are unjust. Finally my most beloved husband is coming home where he belongs.

No longer will he suffer the unspeakable abuses he has ensured at Holman Prison. I am on my knees, so thankful for such a blessing as this.
